Wedding Planning Mistakes to Avoid

Even with the help of a wedding planner, making sure your wedding day goes off without a hitch can be a big challenge. The following are common mistakes to avoid for smooth sailing into happily ever after.

Not making a schedule for the day.

The photos, the ceremony, the reception – oh my! There’s a lot to do in one day. Create an itinerary of how everything will go down with plenty of time to revise. This will cut down on chaos and confusion the day of and ensure you have enough time to do everything without rushing.

Not allocating enough time for photos.

A common mistake many couples make is not realizing how time consuming photos can be, especially when coordinating large-group photos. Make a game plan with your photographer ahead of time about the types of shots you want and how long he/she estimates they will take.

Not setting a time limit for speeches.

Another scheduling snafu to avoid is allowing speeches to drag on too long. An overly long or boring speech can kill the vibe. While you can’t control what the best man will say, you can make sure they keep it within a 10-minute time limit.

Not planning for rain.

This one only applies to outdoor weddings, but you’d be surprised how many couples simply cross their fingers and hope for perfect weather. No matter what the forecast says, have a plan B ready.

Assuming 10 percent of guests won’t come.

Ignore that old statistic that 10 percent of those you invite will RSVP “no.” Err on the side of caution and assume everyone is coming. You’ll be in trouble if guests show up and have nowhere to sit.
